AGENDA

In a world upended by the pandemic, the meticulous risk assessments of insurance companies no longer reflect our current reality. California's Insurance Commissioner has already acted swiftly to see that certain lines of insurance pay out policyholders in recognition of dramatic declines in customer claims. What other insurance risks no longer reflect the market, and how many tens of millions of dollars are left unspent or unassessed?

- In addition to the Insurance Commissioner's action to pay out policyholders, what other guidelines will the state consider as risk profiles and the corresponding premiums are reconfigured?
- What types of insurance are being stressed by increasing risks during the pandemic?
- How has the health insurance industry been affected? Are there opportunities to activate unexpected windfalls as policyholder claims decline?
- How do we help policyholders, insurance companies, and California communities to navigate these turbulent times and come out stronger on the other side?
